This whitepaper explores how packet based, data centric, technologies are transforming telephony in the SMB market. It describes the traditional   TDM and analog methods for carrying voice calls within and between customer offices, and compares those methods to the newer packet based approaches.

It also provides information about the changes that Ethernet LAN technology has made to the delivery of data for CTI applications.